Dear Beau,

I'm enclosing seven photographs ~~from~~ that I've just received from the Federal Defenders Office in Sacramento. Unfortunately I don't know who owns the copyrights to these photos. Apparently Quin Denvir is under the impression that the photo that shows 3 people was found by the FBI in my cabin, but that is not true. I don't know where the FBI got that photo. There were some family photos in my cabin at the time I was arrested, but I have been unable to ascertain what happened to them.

As for photos A through F, they were probably taken by members of my defense team, and if so, there should be no ~~too~~ trouble about getting permission to publish them, but I don't know which members of my defense team took them.

I suggest that you contact ~~Quin Denvir~~ to discuss the problem of determining the origin of these photos and who holds the copyright.

Since my experiences in Montana ~~take~~ play only a very small role in my book, you may want to save most of the landscape photos for another book that I expect to write, ^{and} that will say a great deal more about my life in Montana. If everything continues to go smoothly between us, that book will be published by you, if you want to publish it.

On p. 487, Appendix 3 of Truth versus Lies is a floor-plan of my room in Eliot House at Harvard. This plan was made by the typist on the basis of a plan I drew myself. I'm enclosing here a photocopy of my original floor-plan, which is better than that of the typist. But I imagine you'll want to have this plan re-drawn by a professional.

~~There is a question concerning which~~

I'm sorry this letter is so messy. I'm just too damned busy.

Best regards,

Ted Kaczynski

P.S. Please remember that I'd like to have these photos back when you're done with them.

Description of photographs.

The photo showing three people. The boy on the left is me, the boy on the right is my brother David, and the man in the center is my father, Theodore Richard Kaczynski. I do not know the location or the date.

The photographs that do not show people are labeled A through F (on one corner on the back of the photo).

Photo E. This is a photo looking roughly north from a point near the northwest corner of my property. It shows some of the damage done on my ground by the FBI. Before my arrest, the area in the foreground was covered with grass. Now, as you can see, it's been stripped down to bare dirt.

Photo F. This is a photo taken from a point leading up to my property, approximately the same point as that from which photo C was taken. Looking southwesterly. The house is Lee Mason's place. The ridge in the background is still to a great extent covered with virgin forest. I did a good deal of roaming in those hills, often on the way to farther places.
